

Sales Data Analysis

Monthly Sales Trend

The monthly sales analysis graph shows clear variations across different years.

- In 2023, sales were lowest in January (close to $0) and peaked in September at approximately $80,000.
- In 2024, sales remained relatively stable between November and December (around $80,000), while the period from January to March recorded significantly lower sales (around $10,000)
- November had a high sum of sales which is about $100,000.00 and loss about $20,000.00 in January in 2025.
- In 2025, November recorded high sales of approximately $100,000 while January experienced a loss around $20,000.
- In 2026, November again showed the highest sales (around $120,000) while January recorded a loss similar to previous year.

Overall, sales tend to peak in November across multiple years, indicating a strong seasonal trend while January consistently shows the lowest performance. The highest sales were recorded in November 2026 (~ $120,000) and lowest in January 2023

Top Categories

The top categories analysis graph shows that,

- The technology category generated the highest sales, approximately $850,000.
- The Office supplies category recorded the lowest sales, around $ 70,000.

This implies that technology products are the major revenue generators, with office supplies playing a relatively minor role in determining the success of the overall sales.

Sales By Region

The regional analysis chart shows,

- The West region has the highest total sales.
- The South region has the lowest sales.
- The East region performs better than the Central region in terms of sales.

This indicates that the West region is the company's strongest market, while the South region may require strategic improvements to increase performance.

Conclusion:

The analysis shows strong seasonal sales patterns, with consistent peaks in November and lower performance in January. Technology products and the West region are key contributors to overall revenue, highlighting areas of strength and potential focus for business growth.